I love banks in the United States, because we almost never have to go into the banks to use them. Just like in Japan, all banks have ATMs. In the United States, they are outside the bank and can be used 24 hours a day. When we need money at two o'clock on Sunday morning, we can get it. And we almost never have to wait for a long time. Sometimes people say in joke that such useful ATMs are dangerous- it's very easy to spend money!

Once I told a Japanese friend that you can use ATMs day and night in the U.S. She was surprised and said, "But what do you do if you have a problem with the ATM at night?"

About ten years ago I had a problem with an ATM at about 9 P.M. on a rainy Friday night. I put my bank card in to take out $200. Then there was a big flash of lightning, and the ATM stopped. When it came on again, the ATM gave my bank card back to me with a piece of paper showing that my money in the bank was $200 less than before. But the ATM did not give me any money. The next Monday, I went to the bank and told the story of the last Friday night. First, people there couldn't understand such a strange thing. But in the end, everything was all right.
